March 2018

Spring has sprung!

I always know that spring is with us when I start writing about events with camping involved - soon it'll be rally time again (for those who are inclined that way). All the same, MAG has been out and about around the region, supporting our rights as bikers. Onwards and upwards!

This month – Ghost Bikes Grand Opening Saturday 10th March

It would take more than a bit of drizzle to put a damper on Ghost Bike of Preston's Grand Opening celebration. There was no expense spared on the day, with stunt shows from Steve Colley and Two Brothers, a custom show and a personal appearance from TT ace John McGuinness amongst many other attractions. MAG is always happy to support anything that benefits the biking community, and the fact the day ran so smoothly was due in no small part to the assistance of the volunteer MAG marshals who were there from early morning to the day's end. It looks like Ghost Bikes is developing into a real asset for bikers in the region – if you've not been it's definitely worth a look.

This Month – Manchester Bike Show 24th&25th March

It's billed as "the number one bike show in the north", and for once they're probably right. This is the seventh solid year that the Manchester Bike Show has taken place at Event City and MAG has not missed a show. Once again MAG volunteers gave up their free time to get the message out about defending riders' rights. MAG's North West Regional Rep, Tony Cox, said "MAG is very pleased to be supporting this event, which attracts bikers from all quarters, and we'll be celebrating all that's good about biking". Thanks to everyone who called by the MAG stand to say hello.

Next Month – St. George's Rock Knight 28th April

Red Rose MAG's 2nd fundraiser rock night is almost here and what better way to celebrate the start of the "biking season". Entertainment will be provided by the excellent DnL Function Band as well as the usual raffles and draws. Combine all that with a well-stocked bar and you've got the recipe for a great night out. Hot food is available, as is camping and hook-ups for campervans for those who want to make a proper night of it. Tickets are only £5 on the door and all profits go to the MAG fighting fund (for details see below).

The End is (more) Nigh?

As you're aware, we're now into the long wind-down for the petrol engine motorcycle in this country. The government announced in July 2017 that sales of new diesel and petrol vehicles would be banned from 2040, but in reality this date will just be a final farewell to the bikes we know and love. Sales of "green" vehicles will increase over the next twenty years as internal combustion sales decline and 2040 may merely see a clearing out of the last old stock. Many of us may be of an age where it won't concern us personally but at least we've all got a date to work towards. Or have we? A House of Commons joint committee report has now accused the government of failing to take adequate measures to reduce air pollution and has urged them to "bring forward the date by which manufacturers must end the sale of conventional petrol and diesel cars, in line with more ambitious commitments from around the world." Given the popular mood at the moment who is to say that this won't be seen as a vote winner? Germany, India and Holland, who also announced a ban on the sale of new petrol and diesel-powered cars in 2017, all plan to start these restrictions by 2030, ten years ahead of the UK.

The same report called our current situation a "national health emergency", which led to 40,000 premature deaths each year and is linked to health problems including asthma, heart disease and even dementia. This, they claim, is costing Britain about £20 billion. Of course these numbers are challenged by many but that isn't what grabs the headlines. The report also noted that north of the border the Scottish government, ever keen to outdo the English, has pledged to phase out sales of new diesel and petrol cars by 2032. Some have even suggested that the model we should be copying is Norway, which wants to phase out sales of new petrol and diesel cars by 2025, just seven years away! Could we fall in line with them?

Norway plans to achieve this using a 'polluter pays' tax system, designed to make the purchase of low and zero emission vehicles more attractive as it penalizes those with conventional vehicles. This strengthened "green tax system", including zero emission zone charges, would encourage people to opt for clean transport over fossil fuel-powered vehicles. However Norway does not plan to introduce a total ban on petrol and diesel vehicles but rather imagines them dying off naturally.

A major obstacle holding back electric and other "green" vehicles at present is the lack of infrastructure, for example recharging points. Just as in the very early days of the petrol engine you had to buy fuel in bottles from chemist shops, "refuelling" electric vehicles can be a problem. Norway has therefore planned for there to be one public available charging point for every 10 electric cars by 2020. Electric car sales represented 22% of Norway's market in 2015, and it expects that number to grow to 30% within the next three years. That would bring the number of electric cars running in Norway to 250,000, meaning the country will have to have 25,000 public charging points, many operating for free. That won't be cheap - so how will they afford it?

Norway has been described as "Qatar with fjords". Blessed with enormous oil reserves in their North Sea territorial waters, Norway has built up a "sovereign wealth fund" of $1.1 trillion. Last year that fund alone earned £131 billion from investments. That's a lot of cash for a country with a population smaller than Scotland's (ironically after making all that money from exploiting fossil fuels Norway now proposes ditching its oil and gas investments on "environmental grounds". They will be keeping the money though). The UK, which has no equivalent nest egg, would struggle to fund such rapid infrastructure building so 2025 as a date probably won't be on the cards for us.

An important point to also remember is that electric vehicles are only as clean as the way you generate your electricity. In Norway over 99% of electricity production is from hydropower plants, which is about as clean as it comes. In France it would come mainly from nuclear energy but in Germany it would be mainly coal (in the wake of the 2011 Fukushima nuclear disaster, they decided to decommission all nuclear power plants by 2022). The UK still relies heavily on fossil fuels to generate most of our electricity. Time will tell which country has set the most realistic target for the move away from fossil fuel vehicles. However we can always comfort ourselves with the thought that, with the prevailing winds in this country, much of the nasty pollution from our power stations will end up in Norway.
